Kristin von Ranson, Ph.D., is Professor of Psychology and member of the clinical psychology graduate programme at the University of Calgary. A recipient of training at the University of Minnesota (PhD in clinical science), Western Psychiatric Institute & Clinic/University of Pittsburgh Medical Center (predoctoral clinical internship), and Cincinnati Children’s Hospital (postdoctoral fellowship), her program of research focuses on reducing the burden of eating disorders and related problems across the lifespan. One of her major research interests is the research-practice gap in psychotherapy provision. She has published more than 70 journal articles and book chapters, and her research has been funded by PolicyWise for Children & Families, CIHR, and the National Eating Disorders Association. Reflecting her reputation in the field of eating disorders, her service roles and affiliations currently include: Fellow and Director for Research-Practice Integration of the Academy for Eating Disorders, elected member of the Eating Disorders Research Society, editorial board member of the International Journal on Eating Disorders and Behavior Therapy, and Associate Editor of Frontiers in Psychology’s section on Eating Behavior.
