

Dr. Tiffany Boulton

Principal Investigator

Dr. Tiffany Boulton is an Assistant Professor (Teaching) in the Community Rehabilitation and Disability Studies program (Department of Community Health Sciences) at the University of Calgary. Dr. Boulton has a PhD in Sociology and Social Policy from the University of Leeds, and her research focuses on the intersections of gender, disability, and health. Dr. Boulton is a qualitative researcher who has studied a range of topics, including invisible chronic illness, cosmetic surgery, and childbirth. Her current research examines the work of midwives and doulas in supporting and caring for women in maternal and mental healthcare contexts.
